- IN MEMORIAM -

The students and staff of The St. Vital School Division lost a valued friend and adviser in the death of Inspector Eldon Simms during the summer of 1964. Mr. Simms was born in New Brunswick, but came to Manitoba at an early age and was educated in Winnipeg Schools, and at the University of Manitoba, obtaining his Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Education, and Master of Education degrees. He taught in Manitoba for many years, including terms as Principal in John Gunn, Governor Semple, and Victory Schools and West Kildonan Collegiate. He was school inspector in Portage la Prairie from 1940 to 1955 and in St. Vital from 1955 until the time of his death. He was a very capable man, with a wide range of interests, who will be particularly missed because of his happy disposition and pleasing personality.

I often feel a real sense of privilege that I live in Winnipeg. I would like Glenlawn students to share this pride in our city and appreciate the opportunity they have to contribute to the growth of Manitoba. This province has resources which are truly rich—soil, minerals, forests, power, wild life and natural beauty. Their diversity gives possibility for endless combination. Their development is only now beginning to gather strength and direction. Such names as Grand Rapids, Snow Lake and Thompson should excite every Manitoban! The fine capillary network of roads is reaching into our north to nourish and drain off the blood of these rich resources to support the expanding industrial activity of the southern urban and town communities where our human resources are growing too. Bumper crops with buoyant sales abroad have also helped to make Manitoba the most favourable province in Canada for sustained employment. Indeed we can be proud of our province, our city, and our opportunity.

The place of this vignette at the beginning of my message to Glenlawn students may need some explanation. I do not think that any student who graduates from this collegiate with a reasonable record should have any doubt that there is a worthwhile and rewarding future ahead. Too many changes are disquieting to older people. New growth, new industries, new methods, new products, each offer an opportunity for young people. You will have to work hard in preparation to make use of such openings. But what an encouragement to know so much lies within your own power to accomplish.

Finally I must thank all those whose hard work and co-operation ensures that the students at Glenlawn have an enjoyable and educationally profitable year; the supervisors, the vice-principal, the staff, the secretaries, and those particular students who have directly participated in Student Council and its associated activities. I am continually pleased with the orderly, responsible behaviour of the students and I am sure that this stems from a satisfactory sense of accomplishment.

STUDENT COUNCIL

Mr. Garten:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the students of Glenlawn for the privilege they bestowed upon me this last year. I feel that the 1964-1965 term has been one of my most enjoyable and interesting years. This feeling is a result of the fine people with whom I had the pleasure of working, the Student Council. Their diligence in promoting school activity certainly has made this term a more rewarding one to all. I would like to thank Mr. Hibbert, Council Staff Adviser for his capable and much appreciated assistance. I would also like to thank Mr. Thistlethwaite and his staff for the fine co-operation between the faculty and our council.

This year was a fine year for Glenlawn in sports both inter-school wise and intramurally. This term's program, arranged by the Phys. Ed. staff and sports reps. under Jim Threlfall, included football, volleyball, basketball and track.

Our Social Committee headed by Wayne Stewart organized five highly successful dances this year, winding up with the Graduation Prom, a gala affair.

The Roar was a great asset to the school again this year. Under the editorialship of Gerry Hopson, the Roar published five informative editions reporting detailed accounts of school activity.

One of the more successful clubs this year was the Pep Club. The efforts of this group and chairman Alex Beatty provided much needed promotion for school activities.

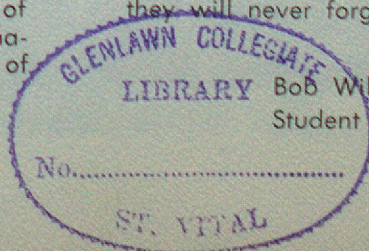

Several other clubs were also functioning energetically within the school this term. These included the Red Cross Club, U.N. Club, I.S.C.F. Club, Chess Club, Audio and Radio Club and Art Club.

During the past year a change in the Student Government system was completed. The wilting House System was replaced with the Room System which enabled Council to broaden the perspective of its activities.

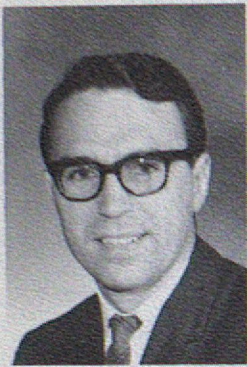

The 1964-5 term also saw a very exciting Variety Concert due to the efforts of staff and students alike.

The sale of school sweaters and jackets was another popular undertaking this year. Sales were high and students were very pleased with this year's new styles.

In conclusion I would like to wish all graduates the best of success in whatever future endeavours they undertake and would hope they will never forget their high school days.

THE CENTENNIAL STUDENT TRAVEL PLAN

The strange, dark youth held out his hand, with a broad smile. He was from Newfoundland, two thousand miles from the rocks, pines and crashing seas of home. A stranger to this broad prairie, he seemed a traveller in a foreign land but was greeted by countrymen in an echoing railway station in the flat, sprawling city of Winnipeg.

One of thousands of teenagers obtaining the education of experience, he, like me, had a part in Canada's centennial drama. All of us had the privilege and the honour of being chosen by schools from coast to coast, to participate in the Government sponsored, Centennial Student Travel Plan.

Many groups, each consisting of twenty-four students, were travelling to different provinces, familiarizing themselves with conditions and customs of other regions. Staying at my house for eight days in July was this Newfoundland lad, with a strange accent and budding curiosity about the 'prairies'. With forty-six others we toured Manitoba, visiting such usually untravelled places as Pinawa Atomic Power Station, and Seven Sisters Falls.

As a result of these visits, we knew more about our own provinces, through conversations and the reality's of actual visits. Not the least of the benefits occurring from the four were many resulting friendships, spanning the miles to bring Canadians closer.

On July 15, three days after the departure of our visitors for their island home, twenty-four apprehensive but excited Manitobans boarded a train for Prince Edward Island. How that car reverberated with raucous noise after the first few minutes! Gathered in the confined space of one train car were farm boys from small rural communities such as Gilbert Plains, girls from Mennonite settlements of Western Manitoba, residents of northern mining towns like Flin Flon, and dozens of the suburbs and city streets.

The flat land had gone; slipping past glinting windows were the pine and spruce forests, wild rivers and solemn granite outcroppings characteristic of the wild rugged Ontario shield. Cameras flashed, clicked and whirred as some particularly interesting scenes sped by.

Came isolated Sioux Lookout—night—then Ottawa—then dirty, vast Montreal—then Quebec twinkling on the heights — then night again. Pounding out of the morning mist through the picturesque landscape of New Brunswick, a trainfull of eager faces peered at the approach to Moncton. A change, a speeding bus, then Northumberland Strait lay before us!

The blue haze that was Prince Edward Island grew and sharpened into a green outline as the chugging ferry ploughed through choppy rolling waves and fresh sea spray.

Over the top of a hill, the bush valleys were turning purple in the distance. Red and grey streaks that were dust and hardtop roads, trailed to the sea. The immediate feeling was one of awe.

At the homes of our island hosts, we adjusted to the almost alien accent. Some said "Irish", others "Cockney", while still others declared, "Welsh"! All agreed that whatever the intonation, it was refreshingly different, and Canadian!

As we wandered the tilting streets of red bricked Charlottetown, or strolled through a quaint fishing village with a sea smell filling the air, we Manitobans were amazed at the diversity of our huge country.

In one short week, the island had been travelled from end to end, from side to side. The laughter of a beach party still rang in our ears at a windswept lighthouse. The tantalizing smell of oysters lingered as we visited a grey monument to that first meeting of Canadians, a hundred years ago.

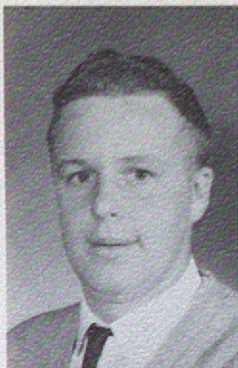

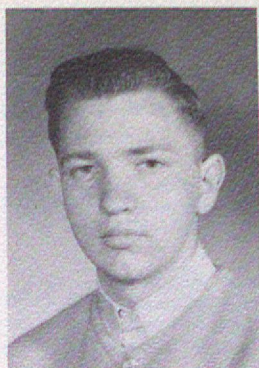

A myriad impressions crowded our dazzled minds. The old Provincial Legislature, scene of so many historic meetings, stood in solemn contrast to the clean-cut, new Fathers of Confederation Memorial Center. The thrill of flying water from the roll of a navy launch was compared to the excitement of an open lobster boat bearing twelve eager teenagers as it crashed through breakers on the way out to sea. The new taste of lobster and the familiar succulence of fried chicken mingled in many happy memories. A ringing speech by Premier Shaw or the roar of laughter leaping through a lighted door into drizzling darkness conveyed vastly different images.

On the way home, we stopped for a few hours at Ottawa. The national capital stood in glistening sun, still dripping from a summer shower. The grey grandeur of the Chateau Laurier block seemed out of place among the spires and gothic elegance of parliament hill. Green roofs gleamed above green trees and shimmering river. The National Gallery, with its Rembrandts, Van Goghs and assorted Canadian paintings, notably by Thompson and Jackson, took all too little of rationed time. A tour of the hill, lunch, leisurely walks; it was over.

Suddenly, sadly, we were home again.

This has been a glimpse, a few moments' glance at a trip that was too good to end and friendships that haven't.

You have a chance to see Canada as I have seen it, in the company of Canadians. The future is as great and vast as the land that stretches "from sea to sea".

THE TOLL

The laughing sea, the churning waves
The lapping spray on the sand,
All this I see on the little beach
All this and the dying man.

The sun is setting; the night drawing near
To reap its harvest from the sand,
All this I see on the little beach,
All this and the dying man.

The trees prostrate, the grass burns low
But a form still moans on the sand,
All this I see on the lonely beach,
All this and the dying man.

Wars must end or take their toll
Of blood that lies on the land,
Must this man, this humble man
Die on the beach in the sand?

The cool breeze was blowing across the wide plain that stretched for many miles. The grand old manor house was peaceful serenity. Andrew felt a welcome security as he gazed out into the growing dusk.

Turning away from the window, he strode across the richly decorated room of the prince's home. Expensive tapestries, hung on the thick stone walls, graced the French doors which opened onto the beautiful balcony. Hanging from the ceiling, a heavy chandelier glittered with light and jewels. The mansion was silent. The young man's host had gone into the city for the weekend; the servants had long since retired to their rooms.

With a sigh of content, Andrew slipped out of his dressing gown and slid into bed. He blew out the main light, leaving only the small reading lamp burning.

In a large book, he flipped pages to the ninth chapter and began to read.

The big clock in the corner ticked away the minutes as he turned the pages. Outside, the night air murmured through the trees next to the house, as an owl began its nocturnal hunt.

The lamp was burning low as Andrew reached chapter fourteen. Disgusted at the chambermaid for her forgetting to fill the lamp, he threw down his book. Soon after, a gust of wind from the open French doors blew out the last flicker.

Caught between the urge to refill the lamp, to continue reading, and to stay in bed, he lay pondering in the darkness. Suddenly, he heard footsteps. They were very faint, as if the owner were far off, but soon were coming closer. Listening in the shadow, Andrew wondered who it could be that had ventured out of a nice warm bed at this late hour.

Perhaps it was the butler, remembering that he had forgotten to turn off the lights; or maybe it was the chambermaid coming with the lamp's oil. But on thinking it over, he decided that no member of his host's household had the curious shuffling gait that was now echoing down the corridor. What burglar could possibly have the daring to break into the prince's mansion?

Now the mysterious marauder was nearing his door. Far off on the moor, the wind had suddenly dropped. The presence of the one sound and the sudden absence of the other was so strange to the young man that he lost no time pulling the bedcovers up to his nose and trying to keep his eyes on both doors at once. The effect of this was that he soon had great difficulty in keeping awake. But the dragging footsteps, after reaching his door, suddenly stopped.

For the longest time, Andrew waited, half hoping to see a ghost, trembling in fear that he really would.

However, there were no more eerie footsteps for the remainder of the night. It was a very weary Andrew that staggered down to breakfast the following morning.

The next three nights passed quietly, but on the fourth, things began to happen once more. Again, the lamp went out. But this time he had taken the precaution of closing both entrances to the room. Again the strange footsteps shuffled down the hall. Again the wind outside subsided. Then the big chandelier began to jangle. It swung first to one side, and then to the other. Andrew's French doors flew open. The feet came, then, in a rush. Fists pounded furiously on the heavy oak door. And then . . . silence!

An interval of several minutes followed before a fearful Andrew crept back to bed from behind the bureau where he had taken refuge.

The next morning, Andrew surprised his host by insisting that he must leave immediately. The young man himself was surprised that he could so vehemently refuse the prince's repeated invitation and two weeks later, however, he read an article in the newspaper that put an end to all feelings of regret.

MURDERED MAN DISCOVERED

Police were shocked early this morning when they were called in by the family of Van Rhineau to investigate the murder of a guest in their country dwelling at Stoneton Ridge. The victim had apparently been exposed to a kind of supernatural nightmare. It was revealed today that there has been two previous murders following the same pattern, and a servant, who lives in the nearby town of Stoneton, relates this story about the affair.

"The original owner committed suicide by hanging himself from a chandelier in one of the rooms. It then followed that every year at that time, the chandelier and indeed, the very room gave off strange sounds. About one hundred years after the suicide, a man was found hanging from the chandelier, his neck all twisted. The second murder came fifty years ago. This is the third, and I hope, the last murder!

Upon orders from the chief of police, the chandelier has been removed from the premises, and a mass has been held in the room. It is to be hoped that the mysterious marauder will appear no more.

Andrew's wife found him lying in a faint with the open paper in front of him.

ELECTRONICS CLUB

In 1964-65 the Electronics Club had its beginning. To the original Audio Club was added a Ham Radio Club. President of the Club is Stewart Crampton, and advisers are Mr. Maynes, Mr. Garten and Mr. Ilchyshyn.

The Vice-President in charge of the Audio section is Bob Andrews. This section operates equipment in the auditorium and elsewhere for basketball games and dances, etc.

The Ham Radio section, under its Vice-President, Frank Hrecyush, has a Heathkit Mohawk receiver assembled last year. At the time of writing, another heathkit, an Apache Transmitter, is under construction and should be completed sometime around Easter. These are set up in the room adjoining Mr. Mayne's shop. The antenna, on the roof, a Mosley all-band vertical, can be seen from St. Mary's. With these, messages can be sent all over the world when conditions are right, and all over North America almost anytime.

Visitors are welcome to come down at breaks or at any other time there is someone from the club there to operate the equipment.

THE DRIFTER

He came into the yard one day
To sell his pouch for one week's pay.
The drifter saw me watching him,
That man whose life had been so grim.

Now he had none to give him bread;
The world was cruel, so he said.
No warm hearth to return to now,
No mother's hand to smooth his brow.

So on he'd gone from town to town,
With nary a thought about settling down.
The dusty road stretched farther on;
The straw grew harder to sleep upon.

And then while in a town he'd seen
The only girl that was his queen,
He'd wooed her long, and now he wept—
For in a graveyard his love slept.

She'd died when death had come her way,
The baby cried, then passed away.
He buried them both and swore an oath
Never again to plight his troth.

Under the stars he sleeps at night,
Then moves on at dawn's first light.
The drifter wears a heart so sad
That none but Heav'n could make him glad.

—JANICE FERGUSON

THE MURDERER

The murderer broods in his cave on the hill,
Wondering which victim he'll next have to kill.
He might try a nice one, the bad ones are rare,
And then who would miss them if THEY vanished in air?

There's a point to his trade, as you soon will agree,
For without our murderers where would we be?
There'd be no good poem like this to read,
And no one to blame for a horrible deed.

And T.V. would lose all its stories to tell,
Its murders that help make the magazines sell.
Granny would not lock her door at night,
Robin Hood would lack for maid in sad plight.

There'd be no one to rescue if Murdo were gone,
No Scotland yard to ponder upon,
No bedtime stories to destroy your sleep,
No more reason for shivers to creep.

Now don't you appreciate that man in the cave?
Now there will always be someone to save,
Mason will never be out of jobs,
Hankies will sell to clean prints off doorknobs.

—JANICE FERGUSON

TEMPTATION

Cheryl Vidruk, Rm. 34

Sitting on the window seat, I gazed at the waxing silver in the inky sky.
Its reflection shimmered in the water of the lake with eerie beauty. The birch trees, which lined the bank, made intricate patterns of white lace.

Why did I have a foreboding to go out into that strange world outside? Who am I and what is my purpose in life? Then I had an urge to escape this monotony. I imagined the screening turning into iron bars, and the door closing.
Two voices screamed at me. One told me to stay in my world of monotony.
The other, was coaxing me to have excitement in the strange world outside.

I fled. Once outside, I heard the door slam behind me. The coaxing voice changed into a loud laughter. I could see or hear no excitement. The next think I knew, I was sinking into gushing, oozing mud. I should have stayed inside. Now I was dying.

THE MIDNIGHT RENDEZVOUS

The luminous hands on Private Johnson's watch indicated that it was about eleven P.M., time to begin. Johnson slid softly from underneath the prison bunk house, a small raised building, and was soon standing up stretching cramped muscles, for it had been nearly three hours since the other prisoners had been locked in their quarters for the night. Quickly he scanned the grounds as he moved stealthily towards the end cabins. In each corner of the concentration camp, guards stood in the high, wooden towers, manning the huge searchlights whose weird yellow beams knifed through the unlit camp area incessantly, illuminating the region around each bunk house at intervals. Everything was normal. The young private reflected that there was no time to lose. In short, quick steps Johnson sprinted across the open gap between the ugly, unconquerable barbed-wire fence and the end cabins, at the precise moment when the searchlights' sweeping beams were focused away from him. He reached it safely and listened for movement. Only the dull thudding of his heart and the low panting of his breath broke the ominous hush that had fallen over the camp. Wasting no time, Johnson then smoothly removed a pair of metal shears from his back pocket and snipped away at the base of the fence, not stopping to see if he had been spotted, for by a process of trial and error, he had found a "blind spot" in the fence which could not be seen by any of the guards. The wire fell away under the blades of the shears like thin paper cut by a razor blade. Johnson prided himself on his obtaining these shears, for they were the best pair that the prison camp had. Being the camp's chief scrounger, he had taken the tool from under the very noses of the Germans. After Johnson worked in silence for a short time, a gapping hole became conspicuous at the base of the fence, large enough for him to wriggle through. Once he was through the fence, a great burden fell from the man's shoulders, and happily yet cautiously he scampered over the remaining clearing and into the nearby woods like a nervous squirrel.

Twenty minutes later, the escaped soldier slowed his rapid pace long enough to consult his tiny compass which he always carried. Holding a compact flashlight over its face, he read his position. Soon he would reach the road, if all went well. He was about to proceed when behind him he heard the sound of dry leaves crackling. In one swift spin Johnson whirled about, and in the beam of his flashlight he gazed upon the form of a jackrabbit, whose large, innocent eyes looked up in bewilderment. Laughing softly, Johnson walked on until he reached the edge of the road that he had been searching for. With a few moments still left before the rendezvous, he sat down in the moonlight and rested, trying in vain to comprehend the wonder of the twinkling stars above.

One could not mistake that low, rumbling sound. Johnson rose to meet the oncoming vehicle. At last his contact had come. As the minutes had been ticking away, Johnson had thought of deserting and trying to escape from Germany on his own, but loyalty had won out. Now that the small farm truck slowed to a halt, Johnson realized his choice had been wise, and he exulted in the joy that every free man experiences. Then he pulled open the truck door and jumped into the seat, smiling broadly at the driver. But as quickly as it had formed, his jubilation dissipated. His face turned pale, his jaw hung loosely in disbelief, and in his frustration tears welled up in his eyes. "Ah, Private Johnson," said the German commandant casually, "we have been expecting you."

VARSITY BOYS SOCCER

Glenlawn had a relatively short soccer season this year as the team was eliminated in the league semi-final by Westwood Collegiate. The season must be considered a success however, because of the improved play of the first year men and the steadying influence of the veterans. Next year promises to be more successful as the team will lose only one player through graduation and gain several good Junior High prospects.

The Freshman Girls' Volleyball Team finished very strongly in the Cloverleaf tournament. They were unbeaten until the semi-finals when they met the Vincent Massey Trojanettes. Glenlawn lost the first game, won the second and was winning the third game by a score of 14-6. Then Vincent Massey came in strongly and conquered Glenlawn by a score of 16-14. We met Vincent Massey in the final and the Trojanettes won two out of three games. It was a very successful season and I thoroughly enjoyed working with this team.

The most successful volleyball team at the Collegiate, the Varsity Girls, lost only one game during the season and that was to the powerful Vincent Massey Trojanettes. In the finals, after losing the first game, the team came back and won the second but lost the match in a closely contested last game. The majority of the girls will be returning next year and this team should be a contender for the provincial championship.
